... in the patent:

Applicants, without any deceptive intention, failed to prosecute a genus claim that encompasses the species elected for prosecution in the issued patent and one or more non-elected species. Applicants submit claim 47 in the reissue application as a genus claim encompassing all species identified by the Examiner of the issued patent, including the elected species. Applicants also amend claims 1-14 to be consistent with genus claim 47 and claims 1, 2, 5, 8, and 14 to more properly claim what applicants are entitled to in the patent. These errors arose without any deceptive intention on the part of the applicants.

3. The original patent is wholly or partly inoperative or invalid by reason of other errors: Applicants amend claims 1, 2, 5, 8, and 14 in this reissue application to correct minor errors that arose without any deceptive intention on the part of the applicants.

Under the Paperwork Reduction Act of 1995, no persons are required to respond to a collection of information unless it displays a valid OMB control number.
